This followed the Australian Flag was the Commonwealth formation of Australian Flag was slightly different from its current form (which began in 1908), since each star in the original flag had a number of points. In 1901, the Commonwealth government sanctioned the review of the publication publication to celebrate a public competition to design the Australian national flag. The flag was selected of 32,823 inputs. On September 3, 1901,

Prime Minister, Sir Edmund Barton, was the master of ceremonies for the first creature of the Great National Blue Flag, which measures 11 x 5.5 meters above the first house of Parliament in Melbourne. On September 3 it has officially proclaimed itself and is celebrated annually as our National Dia in the Flag of Australia. Australian National Flag of 1908 by 1903, the stars of the South Cross were standardized, with the 4 great stars each of 7 points and the most small star in 5 points. In 1908, the star of the Commonwealth changed from 6 to 7 points, with 6 points that represent the states, and the only point that represents all the territories. Meaning and symbols The Australian national flag is a design of stars and striking crosses. This the unique combination of devices has created an attractive and significant flag that, by law, custom and tradition is the main national symbol of Australia. Our flag must be treated with dignity and respect, since it represents all Australian citizens, equally than, background, race, color, religion or age. Our flag is a of the contributions of past and present generations to the nation and of The inheritance that will pass to future generations. The Commonwealth Starsis the emblem of the Australian federation. The second post-1801 version is represented in the Australian flag. It was often used to represent them collectively, and each colony also had its own flag based on the union flag. [30] As an Australian national conscience began to emerge, several flag movements were formed and new unofficial flags were used. [30] Two attempts were made throughout the nineteenth century to design a national flag created in 1823-1824 by captains John Nicholson and John Bingle. [30] This flag consisted of a red cross on a white background, with an eight -point star in each of the four limbs of the cross, incorporating a flag of the permit was the flag of Federation 1831, also designed by Nicholson. This flag was the same in the national colonial flag, except that the cross was blue instead of similar to that of San Jorge. Although the flag was designed by Nicholson in 1831, it was not widely popular until the last part of the century, when the calls to the federation began to grow stronger. [30] These flags, and many others such as the Flag of Eureka (which entered into use in the Eureka stock in 1854), presented stars that represented the southern cross. [30] The older flag older to show the stars arranged as seen in the sky is the flag of the antitransportation league, which is similar in the design of the current national flag. [30] The differences were that there was no star of the Commonwealth, while the components of the South Cross are shown with eight points and in gold. This flag was briefly used, as two after the formation of the antitransportation league in 1851, the authorities They decided to stop the intake of convicts, so ATL stopped its activities. [30] The Eureka flag has become a lasting symbol in Australian Australian culture##### ensign for naval and official use. The designs were judged on seven criteria: loyalty to the Empire, Federation, history, heraldry, distinctiveness, utility and cost of manufacture. [5] The majority of designs incorporated the Union Flag and the Southern Cross, but native animals were also popular, including one that depicted a variety of indigenous animals playing cricket. [36] The entries were put on display at the Royal Exhibition Building in Melbourne and the judges took six days to deliberate before reaching their conclusion. [36] Five almost identical entries were chosen as the winning design, and the designers shared the A£A200 (2009: $25,000) prize money. They were Ivor Evans, a fourteen-year-old schoolboy from Melbourne; Leslie John Hawkins, a teenager apprenticed to an optician from Sydney; Egbert John Nuttall, an architect from Melbourne; Annie Dorrington, an artist from Perth; and William Stevens, a ship's officer from Auckland, New Zealand. The five winners received A£A40 each.[36] The differences to the current flag were the six-pointed Commonwealth Star, while the components stars in the Southern Cross had different numbers of points, with more if the real star was brighter. This led to five stars of nine, eight, seven, six and five points respectively, [36] The flag's initial reception was mixed. Readers of the Age newspaper were told that: "a huge Blue Ensign with the prize design of the Southern Cross and a six pointed star thereon was run up to the top of the flagstaff on the dome and breaking, streamed out on the heavy south-westerly breeze, a brave and inspiring picture."[37] The report carried by the Argus newspaper was also celebratory in nature, stating: "In sngisnE deR sosoremun odnartsom ,rewoP sumitpeS dloraH rop otnemalraP ougitnA led asaC al ed arutrepa al ed laicifo y lanigiro arutnip aL ]64[. [62] Alfã © Rez Azul could only fly in a state government building if a state flag was not available. [45] On June 2, 1904, it was approved by Parliament to replace the union Jack with the "Australian flag" in forts. Initially, the Department of Defense resisted the use of Union Jack. After being approached by the Department of Defense, Prime Minister Chris Watson declared in the Parliament that he was not satisfied with the design of the Australian flag and that the implementation of the resolution of 1904 could wait until the Consideration to "adopt another [flag] that in our opinion is more appropriate. It was flown at the 1907 State Premiers conference in Melbourne and during the 1927 visit to Australia of the Duke and Duchess of York, the future King George VI and Queen Elizabeth.[70] In the 1920s there was debate over whether the Blue Ensign was reserved for Commonwealth buildings only, culminating in a 1924 agreement that the Union Flag should take precedence as the National Flag with state and local governments henceforth able to use the Union flag alongside, and it was the Union Flag that covered the coffins of Australia's war dead.[45][71] In 1940 the Victorian government passed legislation allowing schools to purchase Blue Ensigns, [72] which in turn allowed its use by private citizens to use the Blue Ensign, issuing a statement the following year allowing Australians to use either ensign providing it was done so respectfully, [6][45] Prime Minister Ben Chifley issued a similar statement in 1947, [6][73] On 4 December 1950, the Prime Minister Robert Menzies affirmed the Blue ensign as the National flag and in 1951 King George VI approved the Government's recommendation, [67] When the Flags Bill was introduced into parliament on 20 November 1953, Menzies said: "This bill is very largely a formal measure which puts into legislative form what has become almost the established practice in Australia ... The adopted design was subjected to his Majestad Rey Eduardo VII, and was compared to approve it as the Australian flag in 1902. However, legislative measures have never been taken to determine the precise form of the flag or the circumstances of its use, And this bill has been demolished to produce that result. "[74] This state was formalized on February 14, 1954, when Queen Elizabeth II gave a real consent to Flags Law of 1953, which had been approved two months earlier. [75] [76] The assent of the monarch was timed to coincide with the Queen's visit to the country and arrived after having opened the new session of Parliament. [79] Main article of the Flag Dia: Flag Day (Australia) In 1996, the Governor General, Sir William Deane, issued a proclamation of the National Australian Flag, which will be held 3 September. . the inaugural event was held under the auspices of the South Wales branch of the national association of Australian flags to commemorate the Australia, Australia Five flags have been named this way. The first two were the Royal Australian Navy Ensign and the Royal Australian Air Force. The Australian Army does not have its own shipment, but they are given the ceremonial task of being the defender of the national flag.[94] The Air Force and the Navy flew the appropriate British shipments (the White Ensign and the Royal Ensignment) to the adoption of similar shipments of the Navy and the Air Force were officially appointed in 1967 and 1982, respectively. [96] The Australian personal flag of the Queen was approved by Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II on September 20, 1962, and it only flows when she visits Australia. It is used in a similar was as the real rule of the United Kingdom. [97] In 1995, the Aboriginal flag of the Torres Strait were also Australian flags. [98] While it is seen primarily as a gesture of reconciliation, this recognition caused a small amount of controversy at that time, with the harold thomas flag designer, felt that the government was seizing its flag, [99] saying that "it does not need more recognition." [100] the ensign of the Australian defence force was proclaimed in 2000. This flag is heard to represent the defence force when there is more than one branch of the Australian defence force when there is more than one branch of the Australian defence force when there is more than one branch of the Australian defence force when there is more than one branch of the Australian defence force when there is more than one branch of the Australian defence force when there is more than one branch of the Australian defence force when there is more than one branch of the Australian defence force when there is more than one branch of the Australian defence force when there is more than one branch of the Australian defence force when there is more than one branch of the Australian defence force when there is more than one branch of the Australian defence force when there is more than one branch of the Australian defence force when the Australi proclamations of these flags be presented in a federal registry. due to administrative supervision, they were not, and the proclamations were automatically repealed. Australian bicentennial in 1988, and during the prime minister of paul keating, [106] who publicly supported a change in the flag of another paam in the corner. "[107] There are two lobby groups involved in the flag's debate: Ausflag (est. 1981), which supports the change flag flag, [108] and the National Flag Association of Australia (ANFA) (Est. 1983), which wants to keep the existing flag. [109] The main arguments to maintain the flag cite historical precedence, while those who change the flag They are based on the flag. Around the idea that the status quo does not precisely represent the state of Australia as an independent and multicultural nation, [110] or its design is sufficiently unique enough to distinguish it very well from flags. Similar, such as the New Zealand flags, the Cook and Tuvalu Islands (despite the hiring that this is not uncommon, as seen with Romania and Chad sharing almost identical flags). The similarity between the flag of Australia and the of other It is often derived from a common colonial history. [111] The governors of the Flag of Australia; In 1998, he sponsored an amendment to Flags's law to require any change in the design of the national flag that is approved in a plebiscite in the same line of the 1977 national songs survey; In 2002, the Free ANFA promotional video for all primary schools supplied; and in 2004 he required that all schools that received federal funds fly the Australian flag. [112] Ausflag does periodically for the change of flag in association with national events such as the Summer 2000, [113] and celebrates flag design competitions, [108], while Anfa's activities They include the promotion of the existing flag through events such as the National Day of the s'galfsuA, yburcS dloraH euq, atneloiv n³Ãiccaer anu noc ³Ãrtnocne es otneimaznal led ahcef aL. ssorC nrehtuoS y htlaewnommoC al ed allertse anu noc ,kcaJ noinU le nis arednab al ed ovitanretla o±Äesid nu ³Äznal galfsuA, 8102 ne ailartsuA ed aÄD le nE ]411[ The director called "the lowest form of censorship." After the launch, Malcolm Turnbull, then Prime Minister and former director of Ausflag, told the group that the flag would never change seeing it as an important symbol of Australian history. [115] A 2004 newspaper that asked: "Are you personally in favor of or against changing the Australian history. [116] [Note 1] A 2010 Morgan survey that asked: "Do you think Australia should have a new design for our national flag?" was supported by 29 per cent of the respondents declared that they were extremely proud.
